NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—The Herald's special from camp on the Yellowstone, July 27th, via Helena [illegible], says the report that prisoners were taken [at] Custer's fight on the Little Big Horn and afterwards tortured is untrue; the men with Custer [died] fighting gallantly to the last. The command [moves to]day toward Rosebud valley, which is [illegible] for wagons. We will give up this stream [illegible] tions have opened with Crook. [LONDON], Aug. 4.—The Standard's correspondent [with] the Northwestern Servian army, in a dispatch [illegible], reports heavy fighting on the Lower [Timo]k. The Servians claim to have recaptured [illegible]. The authorities are silent on the subject [illegible] were heavy. Four hundred wounded [are] expected at Paratchin, and there are 700 at [illegible] without surgeons. Tchernayeff's army [is] entrenched at Alexatz and Delegrade. LONDON, Aug. 5.—The Times says silver was in [demand] last night at 51 per ounce, and some [illegible] buyers have tried to get a supply at 51½d, but [there] is no stock here. An impression prevails in [some qu]arters that Germany is holding back her [silver] for higher prices, but it is very doubtful [if] Germany and her supply of silver may not [be] a mere bugbear, but that there must be now [a] genuine demand for it is certain. Finan[cial circles say] bar silver was yesterday quoted at 51½d, but no transactions were reported in consequence of absence of supplies. WASHINGTON CITY.

Report of Committee on Mississippi Outrages.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—It is confidently predicted that the Boutwell committee to report on alleged election outrages in Mississippi will be such as to make it very questionable whether Lamar will be admitted as Senator. There are some indications that the committee will report that it appears from the evidence that the legislature which elected Lamar was unlawfully chosen and its acts are invalid. The testimony on this point is said to be overwhelming and positive.

Silver Bill Introduced by Logan.

The Tribune's Washington special says Senator Logan to-day introduced a bill for the issue of silver coin and to make the silver dollar a legal tender, which was referred to the finance committee.

Democratic Blunder

It has been discovered that by an error in the sundry civil service bill the Democrats have failed to abolish the office of printer which they so maliciously attacked, and have abolished the office of superintendent of printing, which does not exist.

Gen. Sherman's Views with Regard to the Sioux War.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—Gen. Sherman and the Secretary of War were in attendance this morning before the House committee on military affairs in reference to senate bill now before that committee for increasing the cavalry regiments for operations against the Sioux. The General favored the bill and explained his opinion that the present force was sufficient to whip the Indians if the latter kept together, but in case they separated the soldiers would be compelled to do the same and there might be danger. He then detailed the strength and present situation of the various regiments. In answer to an inquiry whether troops could be spared from the South to reinforce the army in the Indian country, Sherman said—I am compelled to answer that they cannot be spared, because those who are entrusted with power judge their presence there necessary. That decision is to me sacred and final and governing.

Question by Ferry—You do not, however, say it is so in your judgment?

Sherman—It is hardly right to ask a soldier for an opinion behind his duty. He ought not to form an opinion. The strength of Crook and Terry's command is about 760 each.

Williams—Are you not impressed with the idea that the Indians are breaking up?

General—Yes; I think they are. Now Crook and Terry are both extremely careful, prudent and cautious men, and will not attack the Indians in position until they can give them a tremendous whipping.

Adjournment of Congress Likely to be Delayed.

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—The Tribune's correspondent, after a talk with leading Senators, concludes that Congress cannot adjourn for another week. Conkling thinks the House wants to rush away to avoid the perplexing currency question, which the Democrats are unwilling to meet. Mr. Boutwell thinks adjournment possible, but not likely. He thinks the Senate will not give way on the diplomatic bill. The new House conferees are no better than the old ones. He is anxious to present his Mississippi report, which may occasion debate, but the testimony is not yet ready.

Mitchell thinks the adjournment not possible. He says the subject has not been caucused, and there is much work yet to do. He mentioned the Hawaiian treaty and the Pacific railroad as questions yet to be considered.

Logan said he wants to get away, but he believes in getting rid of the business of Congress first. He thinks a caucus will be held to-morrow, when reports will be made by several committees and the condition of business ascertained. It looks to him improbable that very little can be done by Monday noon.

Randall says he finds to-day if both houses would stop talking and go to work adjournment would be practicable on Monday. He thought an adjournment could be reached in four days as easily as in four weeks, especially in cases where things are understood as well as the appropriation bill.

Most of the Democrats, Jones of Florida being an exception, think an adjournment on Monday practicable and proper.

Dawes, who has been in Congress so long that his judgment is good, said no arrangement on the appropriation bill has been made that gives any sort of promise, and he could not think it possible to adjourn so soon.

Ferry (President pro tem) said adjournment cannot be hurried in the Senate and is not desirable; that there is a large amount of business before the senate in which committees and Senators are interested, and they will each think their business most important, and a great amount of discussion is probable.

Oglesby thinks Congress ought to adjourn and can adjourn by Monday.

Cameron of Pennsylvania thinks nothing is made by staying here any longer, and that an arrangement can be reached by Monday for adjournment.

Hamlin did not think Congress ought to adjourn until business is over, and that cannot be finished by Monday. He thinks his postal bill will occasion debate.

Wright is opposed to adjournment without considering his claims bill, and Edmunds wants the Pacific railroad business disposed of. All things considered, it looks improbable that the Senate will concur in the House resolution.

Knott's Fiasco.

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—The Tribune's Washington special says Proctor Knott has made the most conspicuous failure in the House of Representatives during the present session of Congress. Soon after he began, it is reported at the Capitol, Frye went over to his seat and begged him not to make it necessary for him (Frye) to reply, but to allow the report to be adopted without debate. Knott paid no heed to this warning, but continued his speech for an hour and a half, the indignation of the Representatives increasing with almost every word he uttered. Although Knott attempted to show up bravado by asserting his intention of standing by everything he said, his overthrow was so complete that the scene at length became a rather pitiable one. The recommittal was carried by a two thirds vote, the majority of the Democrats voting with the Republicans, and only nine members of that party representing districts in Northern States voting in the negative. By his performance to-day Knott has probably lost what little respect he still retained among the majority of the members of the House. He certainly will have hereafter very little influence, even among members of his own party.

River and Harbor Appropriation Bill.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—All Oregon items, except provisions for surveys, were retained at amounts telegraphed on Saturday.

A Bill for the Repeal of the Resumption Act Agreed upon.

The House committee on banks and currency today decided by a vote of six against four to report and recommend the passage of the bill providing for the repeal of the resumption clause of the third section of the specie resumption act of 1874; also agreed to report, with only verbal amendments, the resolution introduced last Monday by Representative Gibson, of Louisiana, providing for the appointment of a commission of three members of the House, three of the Senate and experts to investigate the silver question and general policy and best means of facilitating the resumption of specie payments, the result of the enquiries to be reported to Congress on or before the 15th of January next. The favorable action of the committee on the resumption repeal bill was secured by a change in the position of Gibson, who has heretofore voted with the Republicans against it. Hubbell of Michigan did not vote in committee, but says he will vote in the House for repeal. The vote in detail was as follows: For repeal, Cox, Payne, Goode, Gibson, Haymond and Burchard, and [illegible]; against repeal, Wike, Townsend of Pennsylvania, Kasson and Ames; not voting, Hubbell.

Whisky Frauds Investigation.

Ex-Attorney General Williams came before the sub-committee on whisky frauds this afternoon, asking to make a statement in what he called the infamous scandal contained in a Cincinnati paper of a few days ago. He was proceeding to remark he had seen the President this forenoon, who authorized him to say—when Representative Cockrill interrupted, saying he objected to receiving anything from the President through a third party, but if the President desired he should have the opportunity to be heard. Mr. Williams said the article in question did not affect him, but contained a base calumny on his wife, which he wished to refute to the satisfaction of everyone. He pronounced the implication that his wife was the author of certain infamous letters a damnable outrage [illegible] [illegible]. It was also untrue that he was removed from the cabinet on account of these letters.

Bills Passed in the Senate.

The following bills were passed in the Senate to-day: House bill to reduce the area of the military reservation at Fort Laramie; House bill to [illegible] [illegible] Indian appropriation bill for the year ending June 30 in regard to accounts and bonds of [illegible].

Complaints against a Mississippi Grand Jury

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—The attorney general has received a letter from [illegible] Walton, U. S. attorney for Mississippi, complaining bitterly that the U. S. grand jury at Oxford, Mississippi, failed to find a [bill] against any of the parties for violation of the election laws. According to the statement of Mr. Walton, out of the grand jury all but one were [illegible]. He [illegible] the report made to the [illegible] grand jury. Judge Hill, [illegible] [illegible] the grounds for her [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] says that [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] ballot box.

Kerr's Condition

A letter from Speaker Kerr confirms the reports as to his unfavorable condition. He writes that he [is] compelled to spend the most of his time in bed.

POLITICAL.

Tilden's Letter Wanted

CHICAGO, Aug. 3.—A Washington special says there is very general dissatisfaction among Democrats at the non-appearance of Tilden's letter of acceptance; that there is [illegible] and there are many conjectures as to whether any further hitch has occurred between Tilden and Hendricks necessitating further delay in making their letters public. The Democratic leaders are fast recognizing the fact that it is impossible to bring the Tilden and Hendricks men in the House together except on the basis of repealing the resumption act. There is no harmony existing now. The action of Democratic Representatives Hewitt and Odell yesterday in leading the filibustering movement to prevent any action on Bland's silver bill, to which Holman intended to get in an amendment repealing the resumption act, has greatly irritated the inflationist Democrats, who charge that Tilden is behind the scenes directing the fight against the repeal of the act. Some of the leading Democrats utterly repudiate the story that Hendricks has been convinced it is to the interest of the party that he should offer no opposition to the hard money policy, and that he has decided to act squarely on this issue with Tilden. They say if Hendricks shows the faintest signs of weakness he will be thrown overboard by his own friends in the West, and especially by his party in Indiana. There is great anxiety on the part of Hendricks' friends to see his letter of acceptance, and not a few persons here predict that its appearance will certainly lead to trouble in the Democratic camp.

Tilden's Letter in Print.

The New York Times' Saratoga special further says: I have it on good authority that Tilden's letter has been in print nearly a week, and he has spent all this time in making changes in its phraseology, scratching out words here and there, interlining and otherwise changing the document. This is his habit, as every newspaper man knows who has had anything to do with him during the last 15 years. His first message to the legislature in January 1875 was sent back and forward from the printing office to the Executive Mansion for correction and alteration 23 times after it had been printed in slips, before he got ready to transmit it to the legislature, and it was only sent then because it was impossible to delay any longer. The Lord only knows how long it would take him to write his annual message if he should ever be made President.

The Times says ex-Speaker DeWitt Littlejohn has just announced in a letter to a friend that he has fully decided not to support Tilden for President, but shall vote for Hayes and Wheeler. This conclusion of Littlejohn is not surprising when it is remembered he is among the few New York delegates to the St. Louis convention who sincerely opposed the nomination of Tilden, because in his opinion he was a man utterly unfit to be President of the United States.

Tilden's Sick Brother

The Times ridicules the story of the illness of Tilden's brother, and has reason to know it means simply a disagreement with Hendricks.

HUDSON, N. Y., Aug. 3.—Hon. Moses Y. Tilden, brother of the Governor, is dangerously sick at his residence. The Governor has been summoned to his bedside.

The Report Touching Hendricks' Letter Unreliable.

A dispatch purporting to be a full synopsis of Hendricks' letter of acceptance, taken from the Philadelphia Times, cannot be relied on. Hendricks told me to-day it was not true that any one had seen the text of his letter, and that the paragraphs in the dispatch purporting to be extracts from it were not extracts from the letter at all, although they might be the purport of a speech made by him in Philadelphia. At the same time he did not deny that the dispatch gave a general outline of what might be the contents of a letter such as had been previously published.

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—Hendricks admits the genuineness of a letter dated Indianapolis, July 24th, already sent you, which the Herald and other Democratic papers doubted or denied, regarding the successor of Orth.

Orth's Successor—Who Will He Be?

The Times' special says the prevailing opinion is that either Pratt, Porter, Morton or Harrison could surely carry the State, and that Harrison would be renominated if he could be prevailed upon to accept. Pratt seemed to be the next choice.

Remarkable Political Movements.

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—The Tribune's Washington special says: Politicians are discussing to-night a remarkable series of coincidences. Yesterday at the very time Orth, of Indiana, who resigns from the Republican State ticket on account of the Venezuela matter, was submitting his letter to the chairman of the Republican State committee, and Saml. F. Carey of Ohio was being elected for the second place on the national ticket of the greenback party, Springer's committee on expenditures in the State Department was examining Carey's connection with these same claims. It was shown that he was the principal lobby agent in securing the legislation which made the payment of these claims possible.

Unfounded Report.

The Tribune says an unfounded statement is going abroad that some Republican Congressmen are proposing a pension of $10,000 yearly to Grant to make up his losses from bad speculations. Despite contrary statements, the President is well off and needs no benefactions.

Republican State Officers Nominated in Michigan.

LANSING, Aug. 3.—The Republican State Convention met here to-day and nominated for governor C. M. Croswell; lieutenant governor, Alonzo Sessions; secretary of state, E. G. Holden; treasurer, W. B. McCreery, and other minor officers and electors. The resolutions indorse the platform and nominees of the Cincinnati convention, reaffirm the principles of the Republican party, and review its record, and demand equal rights for all citizens.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Senate

The concurrent resolution providing for final adjournment on Monday next was read.

Windom moved that it be referred to the committee on appropriations. Agreed to.

On motion of Ingalls, the Senate insisted on its amendment to the bill to provide for the sale of the Osage lands in Kansas to actual settlers, and agreed to the committee of conference asked for by the House. The Chair appointed as such committee on the part of the Senate Ingalls, Edmunds and Kernan.

Davis called up the report made by the committee on finance some weeks ago in regard to the discrepancies in the statements of the Treasury Department, and spoke at length on the subject.

Logan reported from the military committee a bill authorizing the enlistment of Indian scouts.

Wright, from the committee on claims, reported adversely on Senate bill to reimburse West Virginia for losses incurred by reason of the destruction of its public property by Federal troops during the late war, and it was indefinitely postponed.

The bill to allow a pension of $[illegible] per month to soldiers who have lost both arms and legs, in lieu of $2[illegible] per month, passed.

House

The committee on commerce reported back Senate bill establishing the port of St. Paul as a port of appraisal. Passed.

Hurlbut, from the committee on civil service reform, submitted the report of the committee in regard to the Chicago pensions. The evidence was ordered printed. The committee recommended the passage of a resolution declaring that the acceptance or demanding of money by any person as consideration for real or pretended influence in procuring appointments to public office is disgraceful to the individual and prejudicial to public interests, and that such misconduct is good cause for removal, and directing the judiciary committee to report a bill for the punishment of such offenses.

Hereford moved that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments to the river and harbor appropriation bill, and asked for a committee of conference.

Holman said he was opposed to the whole bill, but he understood the amendments reduced the House appropriations, and he therefore moved they be concurred in.

Conger said the measure was the bill of the people par excellence, the bill that the grangers and farmers devised to have passed, that they might have cheap transportation.

Holman's motion was rejected, and he then moved to lay the bill on the table; rejected—yeas 40, nays 145.

Hereford's motion was agreed to, and Conger appointed Hereford, Ragan and Dunnell.

Banning, chairman of the committee on military appropriations, submitted a report on the contract for soldiers' head stones. The report declared the contract was irregular in its character, and it reflects somewhat severely on Secretary Belknap, but recommends no action. Ordered printed.

The House went into the committee of the whole and was addressed by Garfield on the subject of general politics. Garfield expressed regret that he had not been able to see Lamar's speech on record, but he spoke of it as an earnest attempt in the direction of reform, and it met his hearty concurrence in the main. Its logical deductions, however, were that the Republican party was incapable of effecting great reform, and therefore that the Democrats should have power. He would endeavor to show the falsity of this logic. Lamar omitted attempting to prove the fitness of the Democratic party to work reform. Without such proof the argument was a failure. He asked was Lamar correct in affirming that the South had adopted and acquiesced in the results of the war. He did not propose to go into the question of the honesty of conviction of North or South in the late war. They were equally honest. He read from a speech of Singleton in 1859, which declared that emancipation would create a war of races, and that the election of a Republican President would dissolve the Union. Lincoln said it was impossible for the country to remain partly slave and partly free. He mentioned Seward's dictum about the irrepressible conflict, and Lamar's description of Seward's eyes glowing and glaring on southern members as though the fires of hell burned in his spirit. He congratulated Lamar that such bitter animosities as existed were dying out. The change in Lamar was most praiseworthy. The only revenge that the North had insisted on was to compel Congress to put in the Constitution a provision against repudiating the national debt and against paying the rebel debt, and that all races and colors shall be equal before the law. He spoke of the great difficulties to encounter. He went on to show the gradual transit in Lamar from a state of hostility to a state of fraternity—the transformation was not yet accomplished, however, in the minds of the majority of evil minded people, who joined with Lamar in early days to defend the lost cause, and he might be excused for thinking that the transformation had not occurred at all in view of the massacres and the speeches of Toombs and others. In the South the masses had not yet grasped this beautiful philosophy of Lamar. Was it therefore safe to trust the treasures of the public to them? The Democratic party had been the evil genius of the South, and its recent years. All that party's political objects for 16 years failed. It had not in the last 16 years advanced one great idea which was not now exploded and dead—secession, slavery, squatter sovereignty, the failure of war, were all dead, and the southern representatives were glad of it. They would be glad to sustain a great defeat in November. The House had carried on thirty-three separate investigations for political purposes, and none of them had found one dollar stolen from the treasury. It was not safe to go back when the Democrats offer us a President and Vice President who, during the war, had not one breath of patriotic ardor in their hearts for the Union cause, but who hated war, hated its movers and fought to the uttermost to thwart the wheels of progress.

As Garfield closed the attentive audience applauded, and Lamar congratulated him.

Harrison of Illinois got the floor to answer, when the committee rose, and Lord reported back with an amendment Blair's amendment to the Constitution. Adopted—[illegible] to 5. Adjourned.

OREGON.

New wheat has been received at the McMinnville mills.

Five pickers got 40 gallons of blackberries on the Nestucka last Sunday.

Parties are proposing to go into the salmon business on the Tillamook Bay.

A Tillamook man cut four tons of timothy from a little less than an acre of land.

There is a swarm of candidates for the various State offices in the new Territory of Colorado.

The schooner Katie Herron arrived at Tillamook one day last week heavily loaded with merchandise and provisions.

All the country papers are praising the wonderful specimens of wheat raised in their vicinity. Some of them have whole stacks of samples.

Salem mills pay 60 cents per bushel for old wheat on the basis of $1 10 per cental; when new wheat comes in figures will probably be still lower.

A Hayes and Wheeler club has been organized at Lafayette, with [illegible] Kelly as president, and J. W. Watts as secretary. The club meets every Monday night.

We are informed by a gentleman who has just returned from a trip up the valley and over to the coast, that the hay crop on the Luckiamute is very large and the price away down. One man sold his surplus at $1 50 per ton.

The annual conference of the M. E. Church in Colorado last month resolved that it would press the claims of humanity versus whisky and greenbacks till a perfect and sweeping prohibition shall have become the secure birthright of every soul born into the world.

A Miss M[illegible] of North Yamhill had the misfortune to have her arm broken in two places by falling off a log while at King's mill recently. She was gathering blackberries and in attempting to walk a log slipped and fell. Many things are easier than falling off a log.

Mr. [illegible], living near McMinnville, thinks it's awful work to smoke. The other day he was hauling his wagon with hay and about [illegible] [illegible] the load he lighted his pipe, after which he went on with his work until he had quite a [illegible] on the wagon, when his [illegible] ablaze. HENDRICKS' ACCEPTANCE.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]

INDIANAPOLIS, July [illegible], 1876.—Gentlemen: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication in which you have formally notified me of my nomination by the National Democratic Convention at St. Louis as their candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States. It is a nomination which I had not expected nor desired, and yet I recognize and appreciate the high honor done me by the convention. The choice of such a body, and pronounced with such unusual unanimity and accompanied with such a generous expression of esteem and confidence, ought to outweigh all mere personal desires and preferences of my own. It is with this feeling and trust, also from a sense of public duty, that I now accept the nomination and shall abide the judgment of my countrymen. It would have been impossible for me to accept the nomination if I could not heartily endorse the platform the convention. I am gratified therefore to be able to say unreservedly that I agree in the principles, approve the policies and sympathize with the purposes enunciated in the platform. The institutions of our country have been sorely tried by exigencies of civil war, and since the peace by the selfish and corrupt management of public affairs, which has shamed us before civilized mankind. By unwise and partial legislation every industry and interest of the people have been made to suffer. The executive department of the government by dishonesty, rapacity and venality has debauched the public service. Men known to be unworthy have been promoted, whilst others have been degraded for fidelity to official duty. Public office has been made the means of private profit, and the country has been offended to see a class of those who boast the friendship of the sworn protectors of the state amassing fortunes by defrauding the public treasury and by corrupting the services of the people. In such crisis of the history of the country I rejoice that the convention at St. Louis has so nobly raised the standard of reform. Nothing can be well with us or with our affairs until the public conscience, shocked by the enormous evils and abuses which prevail, shall have demanded and compelled an unsparing reformation of our national administration, its head and its members. In such a reformation the removal of a single officer, even the President, is comparatively a trifling matter, if the system which he represents and which has fostered him, as he has fostered it, is suffered to remain. The President alone must not be made the scapegoat for the enormities of the system which infects the public service and threatens the destruction of our institutions. In some respects I hold that the present executive has been the victim rather than the author of that vicious system. Congressional and party leaders have been stronger than the President. No one man could have created it, and the removal of no one man can remedy it. It is thoroughly corrupt and must be swept remorselessly away by the election of a government composed of elements entirely new and pledged to radical reform. I trust the work of reform must eventually be the restoration of the normal operation of the constitution of the United States with all its amendments. The necessities of war cannot be pleaded in time of peace; the right of local self-government as guaranteed by the constitution must be everywhere restored, and the centralized, almost personal imperialism which has been practiced must be done away, or the first principles of the Republic will be lost. Our financial system of expedients must be reformed. Gold and silver are the real standards of value, and our national currency will not be a perfect medium of exchange until it shall be convertible at the pleasure of the holder.

As I have heretofore said, no one desires a return to specie payment more earnestly than I do, but I do not believe that it will or can be reached in harmony with the interests of the people by artificial measures for the contraction of the currency, any more than I believe that wealth or permanent prosperity can be created by an inflation of the currency. The laws of finance cannot be disregarded with impunity. The financial policy of the government, if indeed it deserves the name of policy at all, has been in disregard of these laws, and therefore has disturbed commercial business as well as hindered a return to specie payments. One feature of that policy was the resumption act of 1875, which has embarrassed the country by the anticipation of a compulsory resumption, of which no portion has been made, and without any assurance that it would be practicable. The repeal of that clause is necessary that the natural operation of financial laws may be restored, that the business of the country may be relieved from its disturbing and depressing influence, and that a return to specie payments may be facilitated by substitution of more prudent legislation, which I shall mainly rely on—a judicious system of public economies and of official retrenchments, and above all, on the promotion of prosperity in all of the industries of the people. I do not understand the repeal of the resumption clause of the act of 1875 to be a backward step in our return to specie payments, but the recovery of a false step, and although the repeal may for a time be prevented, yet the determination of the Democratic party on the subject has been declared, and there should be no hindrances put in the way of return of specie payments as such hindrance. Says the platform of the St. Louis convention: we denounce the resumption clause of the act of 1875 and demand its repeal. I thoroughly believe by public economy, by official retrenchments and by wise finance enabling us to accumulate precious metals, resumption at an early day is possible without producing artificial scarcity of the currency or disturbing public or commercial credit, and that these reforms, together with the restoration of pure government, will restore general confidence, encourage useful investments of capital, furnish employment to labor and relieve the country of the paralysis of hard times. With the industries of the people there have been frequent interferences; many industries have been impoverished to subsidize a few; our commerce has been degraded to an inferior position in the high seas; manufactures have been diminished; agriculture has been embarrassed, and the distress of the industrial classes demand that the laws shall be reformed. The burdens of the people must also be lightened by a great change in our system of public expenses. Profligate expenditures, which increased taxation from $5 per capita in 1860 to $18 in 1870, tells its own story of our pressing need of reform. Our treaties with foreign powers should also be revised and amended in so far as they leave citizens of foreign birth in any particular less secure in any country on earth than they would be if they had been born on our own soil, and the iniquitous coolie system, which through the agency of wealthy companies imports Chinese bondsmen and establishes a species of slavery and interferes with the just rewards of labor on our Pacific Coast, should be utterly abolished. In the reform of our civil service I most heartily endorse that section in the platform which declares that the civil service ought not to be subject to change at every election, and that it ought not to be made the brief reward of party zeal, but it ought to be the award for competency and held for fidelity in public employ. I hope never again to see cruel and remorseless proscription for political opinion which has disgraced the administration for the last eight years. Bad as civil service now is, as all know, it has some men of tried integrity and proved ability. Such men only should be retained in office, but no man should be retained on any consideration who has prostituted his office to the purpose of partisan intimidation or compulsion, or who has furnished money to corrupt elections. This is done and has been done in almost every country. It is a blight upon the morals of the country and ought to be reformed. In respect to our common schools I have only this to say, that in my judgment the man or party that would involve our schools in political or sectarian controversy is an enemy to the schools—the man or party having charge of schools must be no sectarian nor partisan, and there must be neither division nor misappropriation of the funds for their support. Likewise I regard the men who would advise or foster sectional animosities and antagonisms among his countrymen as a danger, an enemy to his country. All people must be made to feel and to know that once more the established purpose and policy under which all citizens of every condition, race and color will be secure in the enjoyment of whatever rights the constitution and laws declare or recognize, and that in the controversies that may arise the government is not a partisan, but will in its constitutional authority the just and powerful guardian of all. Strife between races and sections will cease as soon as the power for evil is taken away from the party who make political gain of acts of violence and bloodshed, and the constitutional authority is placed in the hands of those whose political welfare requires that peace and good order shall be preserved. Everywhere it will be seen, gentlemen, that I am in entire accord with the platform of the convention by which I have been nominated as candidate for office of Vice President of the United States. I cannot close in conclusion to express my satisfaction at being associated with the candidate for President who is first among his equals as the representative of the spirit or of a movement for reform. In his official career as executive of the great state of New York he has in a comparatively short record reformed the public service and reduced the public burden so as to have earned at once the gratitude of his State and the admiration of the country. The people know him to be thoroughly in earnest. He has shown himself to be possessed of powers which fit him for an eminent degree for the great work of reform which this country now needs, and if he shall be elected by the people to the high office of President, I believe that the day of his inauguration will be the beginning of a new era of peace, purity and prosperity in all departments of our government.

I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant,

THOMAS A. HENDRICKS.

To the Hon. J. A. McClernand, chairman, and others of committee.

An Illinois man married the daughter of a rich banker. The young wife leads a life of gayety that is far from pleasing her husband. But then she is an only child, and the father is wealthy; some allowance must be made. Nevertheless he cannot but complain to her father. "Tell my daughter," replies the stern parent, tired of his complaints, "that if she gives you any further cause for complaint I will—" "You will—" "I will cut her off with a shilling."

LETTER FROM PHILADELPHIA

PHILADELPHIA, July 25, 1876.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE OREGONIAN:

"Oh! what outrageous weather this is—why, I wouldn't live in Philadelphia if you were to give me a whole block on Chestnut street. I intend to leave the place just as soon as possible and take the cars direct for the Pacific coast, where a man can get some sleep at night," said a panting Oregonian, with his tongue out, as he wiped the perspiration from his face and went around Agricultural Hall the other day growling out his maledictions on the managers for not "putting that ice water where a man can find it." He had come three or four thousand miles, prompted by a patriotic impulse, to pay the homage of a visit to the birth place of the Republic, and having sweltered here in the heat for two or three weeks, had found it nothing but a weariness of flesh and a vexation of spirit, and so took this manner of expressing his appreciation of the delights of a Centennial summer in the Quaker City. The weather had sapped his strength, weakened his nerves, ruined his temper and left him an oozy, clammy, skeleton-like excuse for a man, careless as to his words and impatient of contradiction, determined to fix the responsibility for the scarcity of ice-water on "the managers," and fully persuaded that in the essential element of comfort at least, a midsummer visit in Philadelphia was wanting. All this means that the weather has been hot—not warm merely—but hot. Some grammatical monomaniacs may insist that warm is the proper expression and that hot as an adjective, descriptive of the weather, is an unwarrantable exaggeration. We pity them and deny their assumptions, but haven't the patience to discuss what experience teaches as self-evident. We couldn't exaggerate the discomforts of the past two months because that is something beyond the capabilities of the English language. We have simply lived to suffer. Ah! how many times have we looked in vain for the comfort which comes on the wings of a Pacific coast sea-breeze and sighed for the simple costume—the spurs and paper collar—of the Georgian. We have been drinking ice water, dressing thin, hunting shady corners, "running" a fan, puffing, sweating, steaming, blowing. We retire exhausted at night only to renew a contest with the fervid elements and to fight flies and mosquitoes. Sleep is out of the question, and the contortions of the would-be sleeper would astonish a professional acrobat. His bed at sunrise looks as if it had stood full and square in the path of a hurricane. He bends and twists and squirms and sweats—perchance he swears—and then lays back and gasps in mute despair, but he never sleeps. It would be rank treason to human nature to sleep under such circumstances. But the climate, the country and the people who will tolerate such weather, and their apologists here in the most reckless falsifiers, who will protest that it is an "exceptional season" of the very rarest occurrence. They are safe because no one will resort to the signal service reports such weather as this, to prove their assertions false, and after it is over nobody will care. The "oldest inhabitant" put on a bold front and told us it had been 30 years since such a heated term had been known, but several injudicious reporters looked the matter up and found there had been several similar seasons since the opening of the present century, and the conviction is forced upon us that the average Philadelphia summer is simply insufferable. You have doubtless heard by telegraph what a delightful time we have had. But we've lived—thank fortune, we've lived—though many poor mortals haven't. For weeks the columns of the papers have been teeming with accounts of fatal results from sunstroke, and with editorial warnings and receipts for use in case of an attack. During six days of one week, 98 cases resulted fatally. There was but six days during June in which the thermometer did not range from 80° almost up to 100°, and during the first three weeks of July there was but one day in which the thermometer did not range from 90° up to 104° in the shade. The number of deaths, according to the health reports, was largely increased. Sad havoc was made among the horses of the different street car lines, on one occasion a car losing three horses on a single trip from the city to the Centennial grounds. Within the city limits the heat has been intolerable, the sun shining down upon the high walls of brick and masonry, and they absorbing and retaining so that there was scarce a change in the temperature night or day, the thermometer sometimes marking as high as 88° at 5 o'clock in the morning. This very warm weather continued for about seven weeks, and left the city little more comfortable than a heated furnace, but two or three days ago came the welcome and long looked for thunder storm that was to cool the parched city and make life bearable within its walls. It was a decidedly frolicsome sort of storm too when it did come, and gave a spice of variety to the weather at least. It came down on us as if on a Centennial "bender," lifting numerous roofs, uprooting trees, tearing down fences and sacrilegiously shattering the flagstaff of our Custom House and tearing its flag in shreds, leaving the city a loser by about $500,000 according to the accurate estimates of our reportorial statistician. Who cares? It cooled the air, decreased the consumption of ice-water and made sleep possible, and what is $500,000 to us who own no property and sustained no financial loss? Would you like just a word about the Centennial

FOURTH OF JULY

Celebration in Philadelphia. That was some time ago—about three weeks, according to the almanac, and people have almost ceased to talk about it. The papers say it was a glorious occasion, suggestive of a great many patriotic things, and that the celebration was eminently worthy the great event it commemorated. Perhaps our notion of what a Centennial 4th of July should be were too far exalted away up in the realms of imagination even to be practical. Anyway, it wasn't the stunning event we had anticipated. The crowd who had come to see was immense, to be sure, but the procession and the display generally was just what might have been expected of these easy going Philadelphia Quakers. The celebration was of too conservative type ever to have passed muster in Chicago or San Francisco, and there is a lurking suspicion among some of the Western folks that we have accidentally slipped over the glorious 4th by mistake, or else that our calendar is out of order and the long-looked for event is yet to come. A Centennial 4th after all is very much like an ordinary 4th of July, and owing to the limited capacity of human nature to take in all the concomitants of such a celebration, perhaps there was just as much genuine enjoyment and patriotic enthusiasm in hundreds of little towns all over the continent, where anvils supplied the place of cannon and a fire company and brass band formed the procession, as there was at the so-called "National" celebration in Independence Square. What's the use anyway of all this noise and hubbub and waste of breath and powder on every recurrence of the national birthday, because a few cranky old Continental Congressmen went off on their ears a hundred years ago and refused to pay their taxes over to duly constituted authorities. Hadn't we better quit this and make it instead an occasion for an annual collection to pay off the national debt and save our powder for burglars, politicians and Southern Ku Kluxs.

During the week including the 4th of July Oregonians might have been met in almost any quarter of the city, and if you had then visited the Oregon Department in Agricultural Hall you would have found the appearance of things decidedly home like. Here all Oregonians and residents of Washington Territory are expected to register. Among others who were here were Messrs. Ladd and Brooke, S. G. Skidmore, W. F. Stephens, Harry Breeden, Simon Harris and Dr. Giltner, of Portland; H. H. Gilfry and Mr. and Mrs. Geo. P. Holman of Salem, and Gen. M. V. Brown, Dr. G. H. Gray and J. H. Foster and family of Albany. All have taken their departure except H. H. Gilfry, who is now preparing an address on the history, resources, &c., of Oregon, which is to be one of a number to be delivered by representatives of the different States, and to go down as a sort of Centennial exhibit to future ages. Hon. Elwood Evans is preparing a similar address on Washington Territory. Of the Oregon Centennial staff, Messrs. DuBois, Ryan and Tappan are still at their post, but Com. Dufur became so completely exhausted by the great heat and the strain of official duties that a trip to the cooler regions of Vermont was considered necessary. A general description of the Oregon exhibit has already been published in your columns, and this if nothing else, will render a particular reference to it unnecessary, and besides the people have exhausted their stock of patience and won't tolerate any more long winded accounts of what is to be seen at the great Exhibition. The man who can write a letter strictly confined to the Centennial Exhibit, that won't act as an opiate to all who have resolution enough to read it, ought to be engaged to get up a popular edition of Webster's dictionary or a set of patent office reports that people will read. The Oregon exhibit attracts very general attention, and the comments are universally favorable. The Ch[illegible] Evening Journal of a recent date gave us a very flattering column article, and in the Daily Evening Star of this city good words for Oregon are frequently spoken. For these we are perhaps indebted to Mr. Savage, one of the attaches of the Star, who has a brother in our State house at Salem, and who hopes to insure him fair treatment, and do the "fair thing" generally by an occasional word of commendation. It may be claiming too much, but there are confident predictions made that Oregon will lead all others in the quality of her wheat, her flour and her flax, and it is set down as absolutely certain that Mr. J. W. Cook's Columbia river salmon will bear away the blue ribbon, while in all quarters—[illegible] in the article as well as others—have complimented Mr. Geo. P. Holman on the decidedly superior quality of [illegible] oil, exhibited by the Pioneer Oil Co. of Salem. The exhibit must prove of the greatest advantage to the State, and the coming legislature should reimburse those who have put their shoulders to the wheel, or, in the language of the C[illegible] Journal, "be dumped into the Columbia river." We have never heard C[illegible] Dufur say what he or his assistants desire or hope for, but they should certainly receive their expenses at least, instead of being [illegible] with "expecting to make a speculation out of it" by men who have never [illegible] to assist the enterprise, and who [illegible] penny-wise, pound-foolish notions about economy have already done the State incalculable [illegible].

The whole [illegible] and front of the International Hotel was [illegible]—as in its winding [illegible]—in one lurid [sheet] of flame, which, seemingly as in mockery of the puny power of man and his appliances to stay its course, stooped toward the earth in the eddy of the wind with a hurtling sound as of demoniac laughter, and then swaying and [illegible], as if in disdain to [illegible] its head, it arose towering almost to the very clouds and [illegible] the fervid Dante [illegible] imagination [illegible] within the fringes of that [illegible] the glaring [illegible], yes, the [illegible] and bloody hair of the [illegible] of the [illegible]. At one fell swoop it hurled itself [illegible] street over upon and [illegible] itself [illegible] fastened its fearful clutch in, took [illegible] of and invested the whole of the [illegible] building known as the Harris bl[ock]."

than the [illegible] [illegible] powers that deserve [illegible]. When we meet them as traders in their cities or [illegible] we find that respect increased. When their laborers [illegible] of what are called their lower class confront our laborer in field or shop there is a growing respect for their power and skill in the use of strength, in their aptness to learn and to apply knowledge; they neither flag nor falter. In vigorous health they prove true [illegible]. In their mode of living with few comforts, close economy and the [illegible] habits they offend us. Doubtless with their habits of thinking and of desire, if we knew them we should be more disgusted. Very likely selfishness and vice in some of its worst forms find a home among them. Vice no doubt revels and crime prevails in some of their secret dens. The signs of these things are here and there appear. Quick to learn and to practice, we may be sure they will discover the ways of profitable vice and crime and enter those paths with less restraint and more greed than other bad men and women do. The police records are beginning to show this, and if the search were keener and more intelligent, as it can hardly be made by officials ignorant of their language—probably we should be astounded at the atrocious tyrannies and foul murders they practice upon poor victims in their grasp. Hints come from time to time of starvation and beating and death at the hands of creditors, beside the frauds upon the dupes of gamblers and upon drugged and helpless men and women.

Such facts alarm us, yet they were not new among us when these people came. We do not judge of society by its haunts of vice or a people by the criminal classes. Police reports do not furnish the reliable facts of history. There is a higher plane and a larger field from which to collect the items of truth.

At the first outlook this Chinese problem commends itself as worthy of profound study in itself and in its analogy with that of other people. Doubtless the treaty of 1868 signed by W H Seward, Anson Burlingame, Chih Kang and Sun Chia-ku was designed to recognize the imperial character of both nations. Article V, as follows, took higher ground than mere nationality in its declaration of man's personal rights:

> The United States of America and the Emperor of China cordially recognize the inherent and inalienable right of man to change his home and allegiance, and also the mutual advantage of the free migration and emigration of their citizens and subjects respectively from one country to the other, for purposes of curiosity, of trade or as permanent residents. The high contracting parties therefore join in reprobating any other than entirely voluntary emigration for these purposes. They consequently agree to pass laws making it a penal offence for a citizen of the United States or Chinese subjects to take Chinese subjects either to the United States or to any other foreign country, or for a Chinese subject or citizen of the United States to take citizens of the United States to China or to any other foreign country without their free and voluntary consent respectively.

Article VI not only recognizes the inalienable rights of man even of a Chinaman, but makes high promise to defend and protect them:

> Citizens of the United States visiting or residing in China shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities or exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, and reciprocally Chinese subjects visiting or residing in the United States shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities and exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation. But nothing herein contained shall be held to confer naturalization upon citizens of the United States in China, nor upon the subjects of China in the United States.

The Treaty of 1844 with China was one "of peace, amity and commerce." The citizens of the United States were "permitted to frequent the five ports of Kwang-chow, Amoy, Fuchow, Ningpo and Shanghai, and to reside with their families and trade there, and to proceed at pleasure with their vessels and merchandise to and from any foreign port and either of said five ports, or from either of said five ports to any other of them, subject to all port duties and fixed tariffs." Citizens of the United States were also allowed to employ Chinese teachers at these ports for the sake of learning the language. The Treaty of 1858 with its supplements was also one of amity and commerce, with the addition of several more open ports, a readier official access to the Chinese Emperor and toleration of Christian teachers there, with a revised and enlarged list of tariff rates on goods. The treaty of 1868 expresses the need of additional articles as the result of growing commercial relations. Both countries are opened by this last treaty to the free immigration and residence of the citizens of each, with assurance of the rights of conscience and constant protection under public law.

It is [illegible] that the spring and motive of these several treaties with China have [been] on the [illegible] trade. This aim led England, with the approval of France and the United States, to break down the exclusive policy of China in 1842 by the bravery of war.

This [illegible] larger grants of privileges which [illegible] logically [illegible] granted to them [illegible] [illegible] commercial treaties with [illegible] put the rights [illegible] the Chinese [illegible] with the [illegible] of the [illegible] rights of both parties except the transfer of allegiance. It was [illegible] any large migration either way, although it opened the door of exit on both shores. But [illegible] cannot restrict its application. Having compelled China to open her ports to foreigners for trade they can [not] justly complain if the Chinese come out through them for trade and profit. It was not the aim of the treaty of 1868 to easy at the head of a gang of servile workmen for any [illegible] contract to control the production, the markets and gradually the business of [illegible] people. Americans are hired and bound as individual laborers. Chinamen generally are held in gangs at the will of a man. With Americans the [illegible] person [illegible] with the [illegible] is personal, or with the gang. The Chinese laborer has his home, his family, his comforts, and spends his earnings; the gang herd together at the least cost while their wages go mostly to the contractor. The free laborer improves his condition and society; the gang continue the same from year to year in appearance and in habits, or give way to a new gang who are held in the contractor's bonds. With skill he manages to keep most of his gangs a long time in debt. If they get free it is easy by alluring vice or by a trip home to involve them again and keep the control of their labor. He sits quietly and employs them upon any or all the lucrative work of the people, and thus commands the labor market. If he were restrained and every Chinese were left to his own free choice to go or stay—as the treaty designed—very few would soon come. Immigrations would be mostly for trade. It would consist of a higher class who would live in families and in separate homes. Laborers would be free also, and they would compete as individuals with other laborers without harm to either party. The poor men who come by ship loads know nothing of our country. They are reluctant to leave China. It is only by the large promises of contractors that they can be induced to come. In some cases they are won by fraud to sign the contract. In others it is said they are stupefied and made to sign it. What arts or what pressure is brought to bear upon them in all cases cannot be told at this distance. But once landed in our cities they are hopelessly in the power of the parties who brought them over. They deserve no hatred or ill treatment, but rather pity and kindness from us. Let the odium fall on the guilty few who have led them into exile. These results were not designed in the treaty. The remedy must be in the rigid application of its spirit to restrain the offenders.

But it has been aptly objected that while these may be the facts, it is hard to make out a case of oppressive wrong and get the proof. Those who could be witnesses will not testify. They are at the mercy of creditors who will make their case harder. The good workers may toil to get free, the vicious sink, and leave their gains to employers. It is a trade in labor and laborers, and in prostitutes and gamblers and opium so intricately conducted that the keenest scrutiny fails to detect its processes. But its growth as a business has already become oppressive to laboring people. The signs are that it will increase to such monstrous proportions as at length to stifle, by its very weight, all other classes of laborers, and prove a moral pestilence also.

These are the fears that many honest people have on the subject. They see no way of relief but in a treaty that forbids Chinese immigration except for trade. But this reverse action on the treaty will not only ignore the logical results of commerce which produced the treaty, but will tend to destroy our commercial relations with China and put all the advantages of the trade into the hands of other nations. We shall lose what we have slowly been gaining from them since 1844. We shall cut off the hopes of business with that empire for an indefinite time. Once get such a people prejudiced and unfriendly and it will be hard to win them again. The whole country, especially the Pacific coast, needs the Chinese market for her flour, lumber, iron and manufactures and the carrying trade also. The treaties as they now stand facilitate this commerce. The thousands of Chinese who return not only pay large fares and freights, but increase and extend their home markets for American productions and goods. The captain of one of the steamers recently remarked that two-thirds of their freight over was flour. A captain of a bark who has made four trips says the Chinese passengers on coming to America consume eight sacks of rice to one of flour; on returning home they consume eight of flour to one of rice. It is certain that their habits are so changing as to demand increasing cargoes of the food used here.

There are signs that the Chinese immigrants will become the agents in bringing their friends one by one to this coast. A domestic servant in this city brought his brother to the house recently. When asked about him he said, "He is my youngest brother. I sent $50 to pay his fare and board, and he came on the last ship. I want to teach him to work. I have three older brothers, traders in China, and a mother and sister. My father is dead." This process of individual immigration may in time cut [illegible] the other [illegible] [illegible] that [illegible] high [illegible] interest [illegible] persons [illegible] competition [illegible] with other labor[ers]. They [illegible] for high rates [illegible] [illegible] work [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and progress.

Our eulogy on the [illegible] of Mr. Goode of Virginia was premature and we take it all back. He stood the pressure so long and so firmly that we set him down for one of those grand moral heroes who will save [illegible] to the [illegible]

DIED.

[SA]TURDAY MORNING, AUGUST 5, 1876

CITY.

A WIFE BEATER'S TROUBLES.—A man call[ing] himself Fred Cortez (possibly a distant [rel]ative of the famous conqueror of Mexico), [w]as arraigned in police court yesterday morn[ing], charged with the very humane (?) offence of whipping his wife. The evidence [elic]ited during the trial disclosed the fact that [Co]rtez was a worthless drunken fellow who [for] some time had been urging his wife to [ent]er a life of prostitution that he might live [up]on the wages of her shame without being [com]pelled to labor. She refused to comply [wit]h such a shameless and degrading proposal, which led to trouble, resulting in the [inh]uman wretch beating his wife. She [lod]ged complaint against him, and the court [bei]ng impressed beyond all doubt of his guilt, [sen]tenced the defendant to pay a fine of $50. [Cor]tez was unable to liquidate and in default [wa]s committed to the county jail for twenty-[five] days. It would be a humane measure to [[illegible]]ed wives and the community generally [if] our next legislature would adopt a law establishing the pillory and whipping post for [the] special benefit of just such fellows as [Cor]tez. A few public examples would do a [p]ower of good.

[N]EARLY A FATAL LEAP.—Thursday evening [quit]e a sensation was created in East Portland [by] an insane woman, who has been an inmate [of t]he asylum for several years, leaping from [the] bridge on I street and falling a distance of [near]ly 20 feet in the slough. It seems that the [hus]band of the unfortunate woman, Mr Chas [Far]ley, of this city, called at the asylum on [the] evening in question for the purpose of [tak]ing his wife out for a quiet walk, as he was [in t]he habit of doing. While the couple were [stan]ding on the bridge engaged in a pleasant [con]versation the woman was suddenly seized [wit]h an emotional fit of insanity and with[out] giving the husband the least warning, [jum]ped from the bridge into the water. Farley [was] greatly alarmed, but his presence of mind [did] not forsake him for he shouted loudly for [assis]tance and made all haste to enter the [wate]r and sustain his wife until some railroad [men] came hurriedly to the rescue. The woman with considerable difficulty was brought [ashor]e, when she was sent back to the asylum. [The] escape was a narrow one, and the affair [occas]ioned great excitement for a time.

[LO]ST IN THE WOODS.—On the 25th of June, [Geor]ge Callahan, son of Clifton Callahan, and [a yo]unger brother, left their home at Dickey's [Prair]ie, Clackamas county, to go to a deer [lick] about two miles away on the Molalla. [Geor]ge was to go to the stand while the brother [dro]ve in the deer. On going to the stand [in the] course of the day, George was not to be [foun]d, and after firing his gun and shouting [with]out getting any response, the brother went [hom]e. Searching parties were at once [illegible] [amon]g the neighbors, and the woods scoured [in all] directions, but up to this time no trace [of th]e young man can be obtained. SATURDAY MORNING AUGUST 5 1876

CITY.

A WIFE BEATER'S TROUBLES.—A man calling himself Fred Cortez (possibly a distant relative of the famous conqueror of Mexico), was arraigned in police court yesterday morning charged with the very humane (?) offense of whipping his wife. The evidence elicited during the trial disclosed the fact that Cortez was a worthless drunken fellow who for some time had been urging his wife to enter a life of prostitution that he might live upon the wages of her shame without being compelled to labor. She refused to comply with such a shameless and degrading proposal, which led to trouble, resulting in the human wretch beating his wife. She filed complaint against him and the court being impressed beyond all doubt of his guilt sentenced the defendant to pay a fine of $50 which he was unable to liquidate and in default was committed to the county jail for twenty-five days. It would be a humane measure to abused wives and the community generally if our next legislature would adopt a law establishing the pillory and whipping post for the special benefit of just such fellows as Cortez. A few public examples would do a power of good.

NEARLY A FATAL LEAP.—Thursday evening quite a sensation was created in East Portland by an insane woman, who has been an inmate of the asylum for several years leaping from the bridge on U street and falling a distance of nearly 20 feet in the slough. It seems that the husband of the unfortunate woman Mr Chas ...ley, of this city, called at the asylum on the evening in question for the purpose of taking his wife out for a quiet walk, as he was in the habit of doing. While the couple were standing on the bridge engaged in a pleasant conversation the woman was suddenly seized with an emotional fit of insanity, and without giving the husband the least warning, jumped from the bridge into the water. Farley was greatly alarmed, but his presence of mind did not forsake him for he shouted loudly for assistance, and made all haste to enter the water and sustain his wife until some railroad men came hurriedly to the rescue. The woman, with considerable difficulty, was brought ashore, when she was sent back to the asylum. The escape was a narrow one, and the affair occasioned great excitement for a time.

LOST IN THE WOODS.—On the 25th of June, George Callahan, son of Clifton Callahan, and younger brother, left their home at Dickey's prairie Clackamas county to go to a deer lick two miles away on the Molalla. George was to go to the stand while the brother drove in the deer. On going to the stand in the course of the day, George was not to be found, and after firing his gun and shouting without getting any response, the brother went home. Searching parties were at once organized among the neighbors, and the woods scoured in all directions, but up to this time no trace of the young man can be obtained. It is supposed that he must have met with some accident, but whether he was killed instantly, or with a lingering death will probably never be known. He was well acquainted with the neighborhood, having herded cattle there for ... His parents who suffer great anguish ... fate, will liberally reward the party who gives any information of his whereabouts or the recovery of his remains.

A HANDSOME COMPLIMENT.—By reference to the regular proceedings of the common council at the special meeting held last evening, it will be observed that Mr. W S. Caldwell, the present incumbent, was re-elected to the position of auditor and clerk unanimously. Mr Caldwell was twice elected auditor by the citizens, and has been re-elected ten times successively by the members of the council. Certainly no higher compliment could be paid an officer than has been so frequently bestowed upon Mr. Caldwell. For 12 years without intermission he has faithfully, efficiently and to the entire satisfaction of all discharged the laborious duties of that office, and the determination manifested by the council at every election to retain him in his present position indicated the measure of confidence reposed in his ability and competence.

HALF RATES TO CONFERENCE.—Arrangements have been made with the obliging officers of the railroad lines on both sides of the Willamette for half rates for members of and visitors to the annual conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to convene at Albany on the 23d inst. All desiring such rates must get certificates to the agents at the stations along the line of the roads, upon which they will be sold special round trip tickets at full fare one way. Those getting in the trains without these special tickets will be charged full fare each way. Tickets will be good from the 21st to August 30th—both days inclusive. Rev. I. D. A church of eighteen members has been organized with the prospect of greatly augmenting that number before the meeting closes. Young and old have been alike ... and a genuine work has already been done."

SOLD UP.—Last year a hand engine (the old one used long ago by the members of Multnomah Engine Co No 2) was overhauled and put in good serviceable condition and sold by the city to the fire company at Baker City. The price paid for the engine was $700—one half down and the other half payable at one year's time. A few days ago the note given by the purchasers fell due and the remaining $350 was promptly paid over to Mr Caldwell.

The Cree property at the corner of Stark and Front was offered for sale at public auction yesterday afternoon. As $22,000 was the highest bid offered, the property was withdrawn.

George Mansfield, a miserable forlorn specimen of humanity who is partially demented through the influence of strong drink, was committed to jail yesterday morning for the period of 20 days.

The East Portland board of trustees at their last meeting authorized the street commissioner to commence the work of leveling up and repairing the bridges which were damaged by the recent high water.

Among the attractions at East Portland trotting park to-day, will be a foot race one hundred yards, for a purse of $25—free to all. This gives all runners and their friends an opportunity to show cause.

A juvenile boot black connected with one of the principal hotels of the city, while fooling with a pistol Thursday evening accidentally discharged the weapon. The explosion raised quite a panic for a moment, and scared that boy out of a year's growth. No damage.

Col John M Wilson showed us yesterday the fac simile of an old Dutch map of the State of New York which was drawn in the year 1635. A copy of this ancient map is on file in the War Department at Washington and by order of the Secretary, a great number of duplicates were made for distribution. It is certainly a curiosity worthy of inspection.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS

The snag puller has almost finished work at Centennial chute. When work is completed there the boat and crew will come down and remove obstructions from the channel wherever necessary.

The map of the recent survey and soundings about the Columbia river bar is almost completed by Capt Jason, and will soon be forwarded to Washington. It is very handsomely executed and is very accurate in all its details.

Col Wilson during the present week went up the Wallamet as far as Corvallis making a personal inspection of the river. He left Mr I A Habersham at that place who is now descending the river in a small boat and making soundings at all the bars.

The dredge is in perfect condition for service and the required force of men has been engaged for the season. The little tug Portland has been engaged to attend the dredge and scows. Work will probably be resumed about the 10th of the present month as it is anticipated that by that date the water will have reached the proper stage.

The pile drivers for constructing wing dams are now employed at work at Halfmoon bend between Albany and Corvallis and at Buena Vista above Salem at which points wing dams are being built. Water is extremely low in the Upper Wallamet generally and the bars at Buena Vista and McCloskey chute give much trouble. As soon as the work is completed at Buena Vista the pile driver will descend to McCloskey's chute where wing dams will also be built this season. From the last mentioned point the driver will proceed up the river building wing dams and removing rocks at places where the interests of navigation demand. The pile driver now employed at Halfmoon bend will probably come down the river for the same purpose.

Sealed proposals will be received at the office of Col John M Wilson until Wednesday Aug 30th for excavating rock from the channel in the Upper Columbia river. Following are the specifications:

The work to be done under the above advertisement consists in blasting and removing from the Upper Umatilla rapids such rock and bowlders as may be designated by the engineer in charge so as to obtain a depth of six feet at lowest low water as indicated by the gauge established by the agent of the U S. The amount to be removed will be two hundred cubic yards, more or less. All the debris bowlders &c must be removed to and deposited in such places as the engineer in charge may direct not exceeding a distance of three hundred feet. The contractor will be required to furnish the agent of the U S if desired with a room at least six feet square on the scow, or suitable quarters on shore near the work, the room to contain a bunk stove and chair and also to supply him when he so desires with good plain board and fuel at a price not to exceed seven dollars per week. The contractor will also be required to furnish the agent of the U S with all men boats, ropes &c that he may require from time to time in making surveys of the rapids where work is in progress and in determining the contents of the rocks to be removed and inspecting after the work is pronounced completed by the contractor.

What can be Cured

Need not be endured although what can't must be. Among the bodily ills susceptible of complete removal by that benign tonic and alterative Hostetter's Stomach Bitters are general debility malarial fevers constipation, dyspepsia liver disorder, and nervousness. Its remedial capabilities are, however by no means limited to these maladies. Its properties as a blood depurent render it extremely serviceable in expelling the acrid impurities which produce those painful disorders rheumatism and gout and its invigorating and mildly stimulating effect upon the kidneys and bladder constitute it a useful medicine for impelling those organs to a complete performance of their functions when they are weak and inactive. In fact there is scarcely any disease of which weakness is an accompaniment, in which this admirable medicine cannot be used with advantage.

RULES OF SUCCESS

There's a rule with the printers when type they are sticking
That is often repeated the trade to advance,
Giving speed when applied to the musical clicking
Of the letters and points in their magical dance
And the rule it is this jot it down in your creed
Never make a false motion if you wish to succeed

If the gaining of wealth is your earnest intention
Have an eye on the cheats never buy to be sold
Lay up slowly and sure it will make a detention
If you pick up the dross in the place of the gold
Let the rule of the printers be ever your creed
Never make a false motion if you wish to succeed

In the books of the age do you hope to be finding
The wisdom of seers or the thoughts of the muse?
It is well not remember the gold tinseled binding
Oft covers the worthless—to read it refuse
Let the words be of gold on pages you read
Never make a false motion if you would succeed

In the choice of your life ever act with discretion
Pressing on in the pathway that nature designed
For you each have a call be it trade or profession
And success will attend when that mission you find
For the rule still applies of its precepts take heed
Never make a false motion if you would succeed

If the syren of pleasure doth whisper inviting
That the wild oats of youth must be sown if you win
Turn away from her counsel a frost ever blighting
Will come as you gather the pleasures of sin
As ye sow shall ye reap take the rule for your creed,
"Never make a false motion if you would succeed"

In the journey before you there's no time for delaying
Every moment's a mint that is coining your life
Then be sure before action, your conscience obeying
And you'll rise as you conquer amid the world's strife
And this rule you will bless as the best in your creed,
"Never make a false motion if you would succeed"

NELY DAY'S CALICO DRESS

BY ROSE TERRY COOKE.

"What shall I wear, mammy?" And little Nely Day looked up into her mother's face with a wistful glance, as if she was half amused and half sad.

"But, mother, it's only calico"

"That's very true, and a ten cent calico at that, still, it is all you have got, Nely"

"And the girls are all going mammy even the Holdriges and their New York company"

Mrs. Day turned a pleasant, keen face toward her daughter, looked at her steadily for a minute, with a faint smile lurking about her lips, and then answered, with the New England word of all-work, "Well"

"But it isn't well," said Nely, with a little vexed laugh. "I don't like to go mammy dear, where my company'll be ashamed of me"

"Then I should certainly stay at home," was the serene answer.

"Oh, mother!"

Mrs Day got up and came across the room to Cornelia.

"My [illegible] little girl, look the thing in the face. You own two calico dresses and a black and a gray merino, the merino is too heavy, and you can't afford to wear the silk scrambling after arbutus. Look things in the face, and take your choice"

"Our arbutus parties are so pleasant," sighed Nely.

"Then can't you make up your mind to go in a clean calico and enjoy yourself? or have you an intention of going to show the New York people your best gown, and how little you care about ruining it? Nely, don't be a [illegible] Put your silly little pride in your pocket, my dear, or else use it on your sandwiches, for I know nobody in the valley has any better than I can make."

"Who's proud now, ma'am, I'd like to know!" laughed Nely, her swept temper and [illegible] coming to the front; and kissing her mother, she danced off to put a fresh frill in the throat of her silk dress for Sunday, for tomorrow the arbutus party would take all her time.

Nely and her mother were poor, but when one is young and pretty, poverty is only a [illegible] [illegible] It was the mother who felt anxious for the future, who spared herself all the [illegible] comforts, who planned and [illegible] and labored to lay up a little for some day of rain or perhaps for Nely's wedding. Who knows?

Her husband had been dead this 15 years. Had he lived, she would probably have been poorer. He was a country clergyman, studious, dreamy, kind. It is true, his wife loved and mourned him, but everybody knew that it was better for her that he died and left her his life insurance. If she did not think so it was owing to a foolish way women have of preferring a living, loving husband to $5,000. Folly? Of course, but then they are women.

Now she had only Nely, and she loved her [illegible] that same fashion, but a certain crisp common sense and provident maternal instinct helped her not to spoil the child, however much she would have liked to.

Only calico! But when Nely left her little room next morning dressed for the expedition, Mrs. Day was altogether satisfied with her aspect.

"Mother" had made the gown herself. It was simple enough, a black and white stripe, more white than black, a single deep ruffle on the skirt, bound and beaded with black cambric bands; a jacket fitting closely, but not tightly, to the delicate rounded figure, finished with a black cambric ruffle, a like trimming around the throat, but within it a pleated linen frill, both kept in order by a band of black velvet, from which hung a white spar cross, her solitary trinkets, and one that was her mother's before her; a little black cloth sacque of a singularly graceful shape, braided on the edge in a Greek pattern, a wide-leafed black hat with a bit of snow-white feather trimming round the crown, and a pair of black gloves, much mended, and a little purple and shabby about the finger-tips, completed the costume, but when you put this simple attire on to a slight, graceful figure with a blooming face, starry dark eyes, and abundant rich brown hair, turned back from the temples and knotted up high on the small head, while a dozen little fluffy tendrils float over the tiny pink ears and low, white forehead you did not [illegible] that the dress was calico

And even an ugly calico might have been forgiven if you had peeped into the clean new lunch basket, only a common splint basket, with an old damask towel folded over the contents, but filled with such dainty sandwiches, some of a tongue that Mrs. Day had cured herself, rosy, tender and flavorous, some of quince marmalade in firm-grained slices translucent as clouded amber, some of acid jelly, and some of maple sugar. O, benighted reader, who never ate this last-named dainty, you have a new experience before you! here were slices of [illegible] wheat and some of freshest rye bread well spread with golden butter, and then thickly spread again with maple sugar stirred white hot into a thick paste, sweet as honey, but spicy even in sweetness with the taste of the tree's heart the forest odors, the clean fine aroma of northern woods and wilds. No wonder that Mrs. Day's sandwiches were proverbial in Becket!

The widow looked with satisfaction at her pretty daughter she had fashioned as well as made those graceful garments, and if the sacque was ingeniously pieced from Parson Day's Sunday coat, the dress, a ten cent calico, and the white band of feathers, plucked from the breast of two thanksgiving chickens, and sewed by her own fingers, she knew that the patterns of those economical garments her own quick eye had copied from a Parisian outfit sent to Becket for one of the Holdridge girls wedding, and did not Lina Holdridge lend Nely the Bazar every week?

Moreover Mrs Day has an artist's eye for dress; she would have been a treasure in some great dress making establishment and she knew very well that Nely's array was thoroughly in keeping, and that it was on Nely.

So her treasure set off to meet the party at the depot, and perhaps the little girl's heart sank a bit when she saw the elaborate walking dresses of dove-colored cashmere seal brown de bege or shining poplin frilled pleated shirred bunched tied back and elaborated in a fearful and wonderful manner that the Holdridge girls and their two friends from New York wore, even the village girls had done their utmost to be fine in emulation. Addie Mason was a spectacle to behold in pea green alpaca trimmed with black velvet and pink roses in her turban of felt while Jane Gloss was gotten up in her best black silk furbelowed with yak lace and her new Sunday bonnet of white straw with blue green ribbons and tips of pink ugh. Nely shuddered at the sight for Jane was sallow—hair eyes skin and tee [illegible] But here was a sort of counter poise surely she looked better than Jane or Addie and one is not so strong minded at seventeen as to despise a crumb of comfort in any shape.

Pretty soon Nely forgot her dress altogether. Lina Holdridge brought a gentleman toward her seat and introduced him as Mr Fearing. How pleasant he was! What nice gray eyes he had! and how they watched Nely while he talked to her in such a gentle, respectful, deferential way that Nely could not be shy and pretty soon her eyes sparkled the color rose softly, her red lips opened to a stream of gentle, playful talk and her bright laugh rang cheerily if softly. How soon they came to Pine Hill station! and then Mr. Fearing carried her lunch basket and she threw her sacque across her arm the sun was so hot and in five minutes they were at the wood road, while the rest lagged behind heated with their heavy dresses and tired of holding up the long skirts. So Nely and Mr Fearing stood still and waited and when the halting company arrived her quick wits and nimble fingers were speedily at work to help them.

"I always carry pins and salt and matches to a picnic" said Nely with a laugh "for I noticed often that nobody ever remembers those things"

It was well she had to-day and all voted thanks to her on the spot as with lightened burdens and smiling faces they began the walk up the steep hill road to the bare fields on the north side of Pine hill where the arbutus grew. The day was lovely sweet with the delicate ineffable perfume of early spring, the sun shone warmly down the south wind blew softly the resinous odor of pine boughs sighed from the soft gloom of the woods and the bright full brook poured over a little fall at the hill foot, as if it were so glad to be free once more, it must leap and laugh to express its delight.

Here under the brown grass, hiding shy faces of baby bloom with its thick dull leaves, clustering closely to the shelter of a great stone or creeping among bushes of sweet fern low white birches and tangled strings of last year's grass the arbutus grew in profusion and Nely with glowing face and deft finger coaxed the delicate clusters of tinted white or rosy pink from their low beds and gathered them in a great sheaf. Her calico dress neither impeded her graceful motions, nor vexed her soul with anxiety. Mr Fearing who was a young artist from New York rapidly rising to fame delighted in the picture she unconsciously made as she lifted her lovely face to call some other girl to a better place for finding the treasures or ran lightly across the steep slope to rescue one of those fine gowns from dragging brier or pitiless bush. For now the finery came to grief, where the bushes had been stubbed knife pleatings, shirred ruffles, folds, all found abounding enemies the woolly seeds of faded golden rods ground their small spikes into Addie Mason's pea green gown and a fierce low blackberry vine laid hold of it and effected three triangular rents, Jane Glass' yak lace left a shred on every bush "in memory of," Lina Holdridge said; while Lina's own pretty de bege was not only torn in the flounce badly, but was sown all over with those small black seeds that on two sharp legs set themselves in any soft fabric by the thousand and leave their traces even when picked out. Before long they were all hot and tired, and adjourned to the waterfall to lunch and happy was the man or woman who shared Nely's sandwiches, even Mr Fearing who had tasted delicacies Becket never even knew in Paris cafes and New York clubs, came more than once for a supply of this new found dainty—whether because he really liked them being hungry with the keen air or because he wanted to see Nely's face brighten with innocent satisfaction, we can't tell or will not. He was awkward enough to spill a cup of hot coffee on her skirt, but it never clouded the pretty face a moment.

"Never mind, it will wash," said she, and sent a grateful thought home to her mother to think it was not her precious black silk.

But Miss Bristow's dainty cashmere had its own libation of claret from the hands of a dreadful boy, who stumbled over a stone with the bottle in his hands, and liberally sprinkled that dove-colored garment with irredeemable spots. The lady's dark eyes flashed and she bit her beautiful lips. To be sure, she had other dresses, but how should she get back to New York without a traveling dress? She looked at Nely and envied her, though the next half hour brought her a companion in misery, for her cousin, Miss Rucker, in an embroidered batiste just imported, slipped fairly into the brook and sat down ignominiously in a shallow pool, of which she made a mud puddle by her sudden intrusion, splashing the elegant dress from head to foot, and making the wearer thoroughly uncomfortable. Other slight mishaps befell the party but they forgot them in the fragrant blossoms and keen sweet air.

Nely had filled her basket to the brim with carefully chosen sprays, fastened a bunch of the deepest-hued at her throat and another in the jet buckle that fastened her feather hat band. It was no special vanity in her for they were all adorned with their spoils. Even the gentlemen were decked with button-hole bouquets. But nobody looked like Nely and Mr. Fearing thought so too, as she stood on the brow of the hill, looking over the long valley that ran northward, threaded by a bright stream, and closed at the end of the vista by a great dark mountain. Behind our little girl a deep green growth of young pines made a verdant shaded background. Her black hat hung on her arm; her face was full of keen pleasure and simple fresh beauty the red lips, warm color open innocent eyes, dark sweet as pansies are, and the fluttering rings of hair, which the sun threaded with gold, burnishing its deep brown as the wind breathed gently among the shining tresses, played over a low white forehead. The artist's eye took in the whole picture and remembered it but the man's heart took in a more vivid and lasting guest for there he found a real woman—not a doll of fashion, or a queen of society, but a bright, pure, tender creature, fresh and sweet as the blossoms she wore, unaffected, sweet tempered, delicate, yet withal piquant in her manner and speech from native wit and quick perception.

It may be inquired naturally enough, how Mr Fearing discovered all this in the course of one morning. I confess it seems improbable, but lovers have a wonderful insight into character sometimes. It does not always verify itself on further acquaintance, but this time the judgment was true. "More by good luck than good guidence," as the Scotch say and if Mr. Fearing did lose his heart suddenly and hopelessly, he at least, never regretted it thereafter. But the day was over now. They went back to the station tired but merry, and far less elegant in aspect than the party who came down the road in the morning. Their baskets emptied of provisions and bottles, were overflowed now with exquisite bloom and perfume, that filled the crowd of dusty travelers among whom they entered with longing envy.

Nely was tired but she did not find it out at once, for Mr. Fearing carried her basket home for her, and asking leave to call on Monday, with Lina Holdridge, and take Nely to the falls.

"Oh, mamma, what a lovely day I've had!" said she, as she entered the small parlor, where her mother waited for her by the window.

"Calico dress and all?" significantly inquired Mrs Day.

"That was quite the best part of it, dear I was so glad I wore it!" And for the next hour Mrs Day was entertained with a history of the excursion—the mishaps of finery the beauty of everything and just a very slight mention of Mr Fearing in every other sentence, till her motherly eyes began to look anxious, and her heart to give a warning throb for she remembered her youth.

But if Nely had not mentioned his name the widow Day's eyes would have perceived one side of the question at least the next Sunday from the frequent and ardent gaze this young fellow directed toward the singers seat where Nely sang the quaint old hymns in a clear fresh voice and looked as angelic as a pretty girl could in a black silk dress and white pique jacket with poppies and daisies wreathed about her little black hat. It is true Mr Fearing went back to New York after that walk to the Falls which took place Monday but he reappeared in Becket more than once or twice the ensuing summer for Lina Holdridge who was his fast friend contrived to let him know of every picnic and he was available for almost all. Then there were bits of scenery he must paint and autumn colors were proverbially splendid about Becket. But why need I recount his excuses?

Breathes there a man with soul so dead
That he cannot supply these from his own experience?

Nely had no more new dresses. The calico was washed and ironed many a time before autumn and sometimes worn when it was not fresh from these processes but by dint of various ribbons adjustments and ties and sometimes a sleeveless jacket of old black silk refreshed with recipes of power, and trimmed of itself or a buff pique jacket black braided or even her Sunday sacque for that was washable her costume seemed always delicate and elegant to the eyes of men. We cannot say as much of feminine gazers for who can throw any glamour over the sight of a woman who knows calico and despises it?

Nevertheless there was a wedding party left Becket on the train next spring before the annual arbutus party took their trip, and the widow Day, in the role of mother in law accompanied the blushing bride and beaming bridegroom and in next year's exhibition at the academy you might always see a crowd before one picture—a full length of a young girl standing on the grass (grass not yet greened with spring) a crest of dark pines rising behind her against the pale sky her dress was black and white a wide black hat was in one hand and in the other hung a basket [illegible] with a [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] to fasten the black and white frills [illegible] throat and [illegible] with the lovely blushing face that looked so fresh with those clear [illegible] eyes and you could almost see the wind [illegible] the [illegible] darkness of her shining hair. It was an exquisite picture but everybody wondered why it was catalogued Calico. However the painter knew and so did Nely his wife.

YOUNG MEN

Who may be suffering from the effects of youthful follies or indiscretion, will do well to avail themselves of this [illegible] the greatest boon ever laid at the altar of suffering humanity. Dr. SPINNEY will guarantee to forfeit $500 for every case of seminal weakness, or private disease of any kind or character which he undertakes and fails to cure. He would, therefore, say to the unfortunate sufferer who may read this notice that you are treading upon dangerous ground when you longer delay in seeking the proper remedy for your complaint. You may be in the first stage, remember, you are approaching the last. If you are bordering upon the last, and are suffering some or all its ill effects, remember that if you persist in procrastination, the time must come when the most skillful physician can render you no assistance when the door of hope will be closed against you when no angel of mercy can bring you relief. In no case has the Doctor failed of success. Then let not despair work upon your imagination but avail yourself of the beneficial results of his treatment before your case is beyond the reach of medical skill or before grim death hurries you to a premature grave. Full course of treatment $25 00. Send money by Post Office order or Express, with full description of the case. Call, or address
